A Cambridge boutique hotel with a restaurant and rooftop bar will open in September.

907 Main, located in the heart of Central Square, will offer a "sleek, contemporary style" while honoring the building's 19th century architecture, according to a press release. The new hotel is developed and managed by Hay Creek Hotels and designed by Gensler Boston, with local firm Boyes-Watson as the architect of record.

The hotel, which will "reflect the freewheeling culture and art of the Central Square neighborhood," is comprised of 67 rooms, a two-bedroom penthouse, a restaurant called The Dial, and a rooftop bar called Blue Owl, which is scheduled to open at a later date. Toscanini's Ice Cream and Praliné French Patisserie will also open at a later date, according to the release.

Hay Creek Hotels has implemented health and safety measures at its properties in response to the global health pandemic, which includes more vigorous cleaning methods and schedules, hand sanitizing stations, social distancing signage, partitions at check-in, eliminating extra amenities from guest rooms to reduce housekeeping needs, face covering requirements for staff and guests in public spaces, and dining tables placed six feet apart.
