HISTORY OF HOLE-IN-THE-WALL

Hole-in-the-wall was built by hand in the 1940's and lived as the Cactus Rock Lodge, a 14-room lodge and dude ranch. Equipped with a family-style dining room and riding stables, it was a favorite getaway for ranch hands and mercury miners from the nearby Phoenix Mountains. After World War II, prices plummeted and many mines were forced to shut down. Eventually, the Cactus Rock Lodge closed its doors as well.

Abandoned throughout the '60s and early '70s, the Cactus Rock Lodge was purchased by Gosnell Development Corp., developers of the Pointe Resorts.

In converting the historic building to the Hole-in-the-wall Eatin' and Drinkin' Place, Gosnell wanted to maintain as much Old West atmosphere as possible. The present dining room and saloon is in the Lodge's original dining/living room.

Many other original relics remain, including the stone hearth fireplace, BBQ pit and rock from the mines. The renovated and restored restaurant opened in 1976, just one year before the resort.
